As we commemorate America's 250th Anniversary, it is a great time to celebrate the rich natural heritage of our indigenous (native) plants and their role in supporting both our historical and current-day cultures. We'll learn how these critically important plants work to preserve a healthy ecosystem and why they face challenges in modern day. We'll also learn about some species introduced by early colonists that have become naturalized in our environment.

Pam holds advanced certifications in Woody Plants, Urban Forestry, and Green Infrastructure Planning and Conservation. Pam's yard near Schwenksville is a 'Certified Pennsylvania Pollinator Friendly Garden' and she is an educator for the Pollinator Pathways initiative with Master Gardeners.
